Overview

Tajikistan is introducing additional restrictions on electricity supply as the country has grappled with shortages since late September due to low water levels at its major hydropower plant. Parents worry about children unable to do homework, while workers struggle to continue daily tasks. The country's electricity distribution networks company has issued new instructions to its branches. Rogun (Tajikistan) (AFP) – In a remote village in Tajikistan's soaring mountains, Muslikhiddin Makhmudzoda relies on a mobile phone to light his modest home as his family spends another winter without electricity. Issued on: 10/01/2025 - 05:51 Modified: 10/01/2025 - 05:50 Makhmudzoda's three. As winter descends upon Central Asia, Tajikistan faces an energy crisis that has compelled the government to implement early electricity rationing. This proactive measure reflects the country's chronic power shortages, exacerbated by a combination of aging infrastructure, reduced hydropower. Tajikistan has announced that electricity rationing will begin a month earlier than usual this year due to a water shortage and growing population.
